

SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT LEADERS ON TWITTER 2022

The 3rd annual South African Government Leaders on Twitter Report is a benchmark tool with the purpose of reflecting on the presence and activity of cabinet members and their spokespeople on the microblogging app.

Although the report is largely quantitative – it highlights some qualitative findings, and serves as a guide for government leaders and their spokespeople to improve citizen engagement.

The 2022 South African Government Leaders on Twitter Report is compiled by #GovCommsSocial.

#GovCommsSocial – an initiative of Decode
Communications – is a knowledge sharingplatform aimed at guiding government and public sector communicators, and social media professionals through the complexity and opportunities that come with using social media for citizen engagement.

DEDICATED TO LUZUKO SABELO KOTI

#GovCommsSocial

This report is dedicated to the late Luzuko Sabelo Koti – former journalist, government communicator, spokesperson for the Nelson Mandela Foundation and Business Manager of SABC's Channel Africa – who passed away on 21 March 2022 after a brief battle with leukaemia.

Luzuko was an integral part of the conceptualisation and development of this report. He spent many days and hours critiquing and reviewing the outputs from the research data of the previous reports.

Luzuko was ever so helpful by refining and shaping the report's content and framing of the insights – thanks to his extensive experience in government communications which always came in handy.

Although his absence was deeply felt during the preparation of the 2022 report – Luzuko's spirit of excellence and thoughtfulness continues to inspire all of us at Decode Communications. We shared a common belief that, "when government communicators win, citizens win."

Long Live the Spirit of Luzuko Sabelo Koti!
Long Live!

2022 SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT LEADERS ON TWITTER REPORT

- All the information or data (on the presence or lack thereof of the respective government leaders and their spokespeople) used in this report regarding the use of the social platform Twitter, was mainly gathered through monitoring Twitter itself.
- The quantitative part of the report does not look at any qualitative elements such as engagement, professional look and feel, tone, topics of interest, active campaigns, share of voice etc.
- The Twitter data was collated and analysed over a 1-year period (12 December 2021 to 22 December 2022).

WHY TWITTER?

#GovCommsSocial

The biggest question is: do government leaders and their spokespeople see Twitter as a nice to have or as an integral part of their outreach and rapid response mechanism?

Twitter's influence has been elevated by its ability to provide a platform for real-time outrage, consumer activism, social mobilisation by brands and governments.

Although Facebook has the greatest number of users in South Africa, like in many other countries – Twitter is the most news-friendly social media platform. It is by far the place where journalists are most likely to spend their social media energies.

Twitter remains the most influential platform used as a channel for news and prompt information sharing by politicians, government leaders, public representatives, media and communication professionals, journalists, and newsrooms.

2022 TOP 10 NOTEWORTHY EVENTS

If 2020 and 2021 were extraordinary years – then 2022 unfolded one of the most explosive ever, with several events that had a profound impact on South Africans, dominating news cycles for months and got many talking for days on end.

- 1. The burning and fires around Parliament in Cape Town.
- 2. The bold and firm assertions by our South African foreign policy on Russia and Ukraine conflict and non-alignment perspective.
- 3.The release of the State capture (Zondo commission) reports and arrest thereafter of few political and business elites.
- 4. Coronation of the Zulu King.
- 5. #PhalaPhala farmgate scandal with President Cyril Ramaphosa's stash of millions of US dollars under the mattress and in couches at his farm.
- 6. #Krugersdorp gang rape and the Zama Zamas.
- 7. #EnyobeniTavernTragedy with 21 teenagers that died at a tavern during Youth Month.
- 8. #KZNFloods one of South Africa's badly managed natural disasters.
- 9. #RamaphosaAbroad (King Charles Visit, COP27, SAHWARI visit, Biden Visit).
- 10. #Eskom (debilitating loadshedding under the leadership of CEO Andre de Ruyter).

LEADERSHIP MATTERS

WHY LEADERS?

Leadership buy-in into the strategic and tactical use of social media as part of the communication mix is no longer a nice-to-have because digital is no longer a medium, it is a method – a method to create public value.

The Government Communication and Information Systems (GCIS) senior managers and government leaders are responsible for key decisions including:

- 1. Budget allocation for creative campaigns, human resources, infrastructure and equipment.
- 2. Elevating and centralising the role of social media in planning and execution of service delivery.
- 3. Institutionalising social media use by government leaders and Ministerial Liaison Officers, government communicators and spokespeople instead of leaving it to individual preference.
- 4. Prioritising governance, socialising the social media policies and standardising their application.
- 5. Ensuring compliance to the legal aspects of social media and how it affects the work of professionals.

KEY TAKE-OUTS

#GovCommsSocial

2022 was a big political year for South Africa's governing party – the African National Congress (ANC). As a result, citizens witnessed many government communication professionals blurring the lines, all in the name of – "this is my personal account, no one will tell me how to conduct myself."

Unfortunately, the lack of tact that comes with this kind of reasoning and conduct is not adequately dealt with by the GCIS's social media policy.

Conflating the Party and State

The current spokesperson of the President, Vincent Magwenya, started his job well on the Twitter front by rebranding his handle to reflect his role.

However, it was worrying to observe that even a seasoned communicator like him was emboldened to project the party message in his capacity as a government official at the ANC's National Congress in December 2022.

This is one of the many examples of how government bureaucrats take advantage of the gap in social media governance and easily conflate the party and state.

KEY TAKE-OUTS

Leadership fails when politicians become a law unto themselves

Politicians such as Minister Fikile Mbalula who often speaks out of turn, making light of serious issues, continues to present a major challenge for communicators as they constantly have to deal with endless distractions instead of providing public value through engaging citizens on service delivery.

Another unnecessary distraction is the grandstanding by political principals like when the Limpopo Health MEC, Dr Phophi Ramathuba failed to show leadership by using the available platforms to ventilate the issue of immigration. Instead, Dr Ramathuba – a medical professional – chose to record a video that went viral on social media and made news as she was undressing a patient, seemingly, in an effort to make a public and political statement.

Missed Opportunities

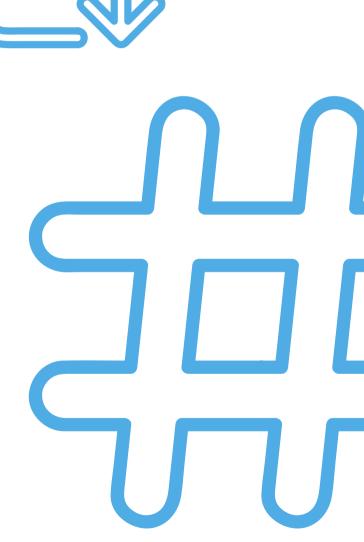

Despite the many available communications opportunities in 2022 such as the 10th anniversary of the National Development Plan (NDP) – majority of the spokespeople of ministers still do not use their Twitter presence for policy communication, promotion of messages of their departments and principals.

Unfortunately, the lack of institutionalising social media accounts of government leaders is a missed opportunity with the likes of Dr Joe Phaahla, Minister of Health and Bheki Cele, Minister of Police not on Twitter. The missed opportunities include:

- 1. Failure to use unmediated engagement to educate citizens and the public on a variety of subjects and campaigns.
- 2. Failure to build public trust through open, humanised and responsive communication that encourages two-way conversations.

On the bright side

The Special Investigations Unit (SIU) has been consistently setting a good standard and benchmark of how to optimally utilise social media to demonstrate public value and continuously educate citizens about its mandate.

#GovCommsSocial

Twitter overexposure – a risk for government leaders

While Facebook has the greatest number of active users in South Africa, majority of the government leaders tend to prefer Twitter over other social media platforms. This skew has created dependency on Twitter instead of a more diversified approach to connecting and engaging with citizens.

This presents several risks: i.e., Presidency, Ministers, Premiers, MECs and Spokespeople with a huge following lend their respective departments the necessary muscle to connect and engage with citizens – however – when they leave, for one reason or the other, they leave with the audience.

Also, should the unimaginable happen with Twitter, citizens will be the biggest losers as government leaders who prefer Twitter are not learning to prioritise the utility of the other social platforms for citizen engagement.

Q

HOW TO INSTITUTIONALISE ACCOUNTS OF GOVERNMENT LEADERS – A CASE STUDY

Did You Know?

- When Twitter suspended Donald Trump permanently from the microblogging app, the @POTUS account which had 33 million followers continued to operate.
- The @POTUS account was first created by former US President Barack Obama back in 2015 and handed over to Trump when he entered the White House.
- Twitter wiped off all the 33 million followers on @POTUS and 26 million on @WhiteHouse when US President-elect Joe Biden was sworn in on 20 January 2021.
- This move by Twitter is not unprecedented. When Obama left office, majority of the top social media platforms wiped off the content from the official accounts, archived and reset the accounts to zero.
- Twitter and Facebook content was archived for access by the public, historians, developers etc. in new accounts with the migrated content – for example: Obama presidency's content can be found on @POTUS44.

SO, WHAT NOW?

#GovCommsSocial

In 2023, Twitter may be a completely different platform whose purpose and intention is questioned and questionable due to the many changes the company has experienced since the new owner, Elon Musk took it over in the third quarter of 2022.

However, the market and regulation in various jurisdictions may force Twitter to exist to serve its users and audience instead of it being a fiefdom that fails to offer public value.

Furthermore, if Twitter continues on the current trajectory with reputation and solvency issues – publishers may walk away like the advertisers did, and the credibility of the platform will be put to the test.

Therefore, the digital strategies with a more diversified approach to connecting and engaging with citizens should be the focus of the senior management teams in government. These should include intentional content strategies for Facebook, TikTok, YouTube etc.

CONCLUSION

Although the South African government is always behind the digital curve – in order to continue building trust and confidence with citizens in a post-Covid-19 world – and, to achieve the objectives of the Open Government Partnership of which South Africa is a founding member of – government communication machinery must prioritise digital agility with a focus on the following 5 areas:

- 1. Leadership
- 2. Skills and Capacity
- 3. Digital Strategy and Culture
- 4. Collaboration, Experimentation, and Innovation
- 5. Investment required to shift the dial in government Twitter engagement
